Hi my name is Jessica Craig, and I wanted to chime in. I love exercising at the beach but am dismayed by the lack of any lights on large parts of the strand. I like to run and rollerblade on the strand, as do many others. As a female I do not feel safe on many sections as it is pitch black, despite many other sections having just enough light to see who is around you and to see the ground so as not to fall and injure oneself. Compared to Manhattan Beach I feel our strand has far too many pitch black pockets where it feels dangerous to not have some kind of light, especially as it gets dark so early in the winter. In all this talk about spending money on string lights to beautify, and in having a larger police presence on the strand (which I feel is overkill, if riding e-bikes is such an issue just install cameras to deter speeding), consider the safety and well being of people who want to be out on a beautiful evening without fearing being attacked, robbed, or tripping and injuring themselves due to poor or no lighting. This has bothered me for years and seems a good investment and necessary precaution . Thanks
