$50 is still too cheap for an annual parking pass in a desirable area. Next year's rate should go up to $60.

Ideally, we would manage (price) hourly parking well enough that parking permits aren't needed. As a part of this process, we should start investigating ways we can do that. Can we use ParkMobile to virtually meter spaces that don't have a physical meter installed? Can we better adjust pricing to reflect demand, encouraging the space to be used, but always with enough turnover to ensure enough availability that finding parking isn't a problem? This will allow this shared space to better serve all residents and stakeholders in the city.
